Mr. Davis is an African-American race relations activist who is a living example of peace building since he regularly engages with members of the Ku Klux Klan and other hate groups. His actions and beliefs were profiled in the 2016 PBS documentary Accidental Courtesy: Daryl Davis, Race & America. Mr. Davis's approach is based on the importance of establishing dialog, believing that when two enemies are talking, they're not fighting. Mr. Davis will provide lectures at multiple Valencia sites during Peace Week, with events open to students and the general public. SEAL-M will generate knowledge on effectively engaging faculty in continuous improvement processes for implementing active learning strategies. The project will also advance knowledge on the effects of active learning on student perspectives regarding sense of belonging in the math classroom and confidence in mathematics ability. Through this project, the Co-PIs will develop a faculty development course around active learning strategies that are discipline specific to math and infuse innovative technology for a variety of modalities (in-person, online, and hybrid). The course sequence will heavily integrate peer feedback and observation activities including the use of the peer observation, reflection, and revision method, Japanese Lesson Study. Participants will create a repository of peer-reviewed resources to provide ongoing support and tools for active learning.
